The Trust's vision, "We Change Lives," immediately resonated with me. It reflects the real difference that specialist education can make to children, young people, and their families. I was particularly drawn to the opportunity to work within a unique organisation that supports learners across both hospital and community settings, helping some of the most vulnerable young people. I was also excited by the chance to contribute to the wider development of the curriculum and teaching approaches, helping to ensure that pupils receive the support and education they need to succeed.

One of the things I value most about the school and Trust is the emphasis placed on personal and professional development. From the beginning, I have felt supported and encouraged to develop my skills, knowledge, and confidence. The Trust invests in its staff and provides a range of training and development opportunities that enable people to grow and progress in their careers.

I have had the opportunity to be involved in wider Trust initiatives and national collaboration groups, which have helped me learn from others, share good practice, and contribute beyond my day-to-day role. These experiences show how much the Trust values its staff and is willing to invest in them. The support, trust, and opportunities I have been given have had a positive impact on my professional development and have strengthened my commitment to the organisation and its vision.

Being part of a culture that values learning, collaboration, and continuous improvement has been incredibly rewarding. The Trust understands the importance of investing in its staff, recognising that when staff are supported to develop, the children and young people we work with benefit too.
